TOUCHING UPON VOTE OF TARIFF BILL

When democratic senators had not even voted on the tariff bill, the republicans had sufficient votes to pass the McCumber-Fordney protective tariff bill.

This question is suggested by a study of the roll call votes on the tariff bill during its progress through the senate. It reveals that every democratic senator with the exception of those of Oklahoma, and one of the republicans, voted in favor of the bill.

There is nothing of Alabama, who vigorously denounces the McCumber-Fordney bill as a piece of antiquated legislation, yet he voted 11 times in favor of the bill as reported from the senate finance committee. Arkansas, another southern critic of the bill, yet he voted seven times to sustain the rates reported by the senate finance committee. At the last vote, Senator Robinson.

Senator Simmons of North Carolina, ranking member of the senate finance committee and floor leader of the opposition to the bill, who has spent a large portion of his time every day for months in denunciation of the bill, lined up in favor of it whenever the interests of his state needed protection. He voted to sustain the rates of the senate finance committee on eight different occasions.

Senator Walsh of Massachusetts, whose indignation against the bill almost overwhelmed him, equaled Senator Simmons in supporting the rates which would benefit interests in his state. Walsh of Montana voted to sustain the rates reported by the senate finance committee nine times. Underwood of Alabama voted nine times to sustain the senate finance committee's rates. Trammell of Florida voted with the republicans 19 times; Sheppard of Texas voted with them 19 times and Overman of North Carolina voted eight times with the republicans. Even Senator Dorrance of Ohio voted seven times to sustain the "iniquitous rates" of the McCumber-Fordney bill.

Ashurst of Arizona voted to sustain 22 of the rates reported by the senate finance committee. Jones of New Mexico voted to sustain 18 rates. Senator Reed of Missouri was away from the senate during the discussion of the tariff bill. Democratic primaries in Missouri, held on Aug. 1. He then rushed back to Washington in time to get in at the tail end of the roll call and voted to sustain the senate finance committee on one rate.

Senator Broussard of Louisiana, Senator Randall of Louisiana and Senator Kendrick of Wyoming voted with the republicans on practically every schedule and vote for the Kendrick of Wyoming. Jones of New Mexico and Ashurst of Arizona are all candidates for reelection, and each of them are asking for support of the people of their states upon the ground that they supported the republican McCumber-Fordney protective tariff.

If the tariff is an iniquitous as the democrats would have people believe, why did 35 out of 36 democratic United States senators vote at various times to sustain the rates in this bill? The answer is evident. They voted to afford protection to interests of their own states whenever those interests were involved. They did this because they knew that the bill would become a law despite their voting against it on final roll call, and they wanted to be sure that when it did become a law it afforded their own states ample protection.

In other words, the democratic senators and the democratic party are by word of mouth against the republican protective tariff in order to play politics, but by their action and their vote they are for it as a matter of business and material prosperity for their communities.

HAVE THEY HAD FILL OF PAPER MONEY?

The fact that during the next two months we are to be visited by British officials, British bankers, British debating societies and Sulgrave Institutionists and also dear old M. Clemenceau of France, all interested in the subject of improved Anglo-American and Anglo-American-French relations—not forgetting the $11,000,000,000 debt—would lead the impartial spectator to conclude that the attitude in Europe on post-war problems is the same that it was at the end of 1918.

It may be in certain quarters, but there is a larger reaction by those the sterling value of its note issue. In other words, the currency of Germany is used in its value outside of that country, is on a sound gold basis. Germany of course is selling its exported goods for foreign and not its own currency.

This is money inflation of a superlative form and it fulfills two chief functions, when the paper mark is sold to foreigners this is a clear profit to Germany and this paper money debt is also a discouragement to those who insist upon inflicting an impossible and absurd war indemnity upon that country.

Russia attempted to destroy gold money values; Germany has proved its ability to defeat competitors in establishing false money "standards."

It's toasted. This one extra process gives a delightful quality that can not be duplicated
